Excerpt: . . . need of great caution in this matter, especially in damp or cold and windy weather. While pure air is essential yet a strong downward current of cold or damp air upon the heads of the children may be a serious damage to health. Some of the ladies of the Committe, even with hats and wraps, were troubled with this cold current. But it descended upon the uncovered heads and unprotected shoulders of the children. It strikes us there is a deficiency of equipment in the way of maps, charts, globes and microscopes. A good terrestrial globe in each of the rooms of the two lower floors would be of the greatest service in teaching geography and even some parts of arithmetic (longitude and latitude, ) while a good fifteen dollar microscope in each of the upper rooms would be of immense value in arousing...
